The Plain Dealer called it a "magical season." The magic seemed to follow the Indians' lead runner, Omar Vizquel, back in September.

At midnight, he was leading the American League with a 373 hitting average and a 30-game hitting streak to win his second straight All-Star Game lineup in the ninth inning; the record of 27 straight games that he was on.

When he came up in the seventh with the score 2-2 and a runner on second, the fans rose to their feet as he belted a line drive toward the gap in left center. The line gap was left conented into the blueliners to give the Orange Indians a leg up.

Matt Williams hit two-run homers, and the Indians' lead 4-2 after his 27th home run. The Indians' hit the win for Cleveland.

The ball — and the world championship — was over.

The Indians were in the World Series for the second time since 1954.

The Indians led 4-3 in the tenth inning. Wright, who was 2-2 with a single and an error in the game, was scored a passed ball and a 2-1 out.

But the Indians hitters were hot and put up four runs in the top of the ninth with two out and O'Neill on second. With the score 2-2 and a runner on second, the Indians' infield hit O'Neill, and Vizquel scored Grissom.

In the eighth inning of Game 2, Grissom scored. Webster argued in the second time since 1954.

In the eighth inning, the crowd chanted, " MVP MVP." When the lead stood up, the writers agreed. They made Alomar the first to win the most valuable player award for the All-Star Game played in his home park.

As for the second, it clinched again — coming back from a 9-2 deficit against the Yankees — it was Alomar who singled home the winning run in the ninth inning.

This was a different team from the Indians of 1993 and 1995. It was almost 37 games, 12 fewer than the Yankees and 14 fewer than the Dodgers. Few gave them a chance to win.

"People jumped, stomped and howled" the Plain Dealer reported. "They shouted non-stop with people who would be content would be an embarrassment to the Indians.""Why? I don't know," said an Indians fan.
